Charcoal as a Manure.

The stimulating power of carbon upon seeds is noticed by Liebig in his chemical explanation of the effects of charcoal as a fertilizer. He states that the carbon of the charcoal forms the base of carbonic acid, which acts beneficially on plants, by a gradual combination with oxygen, but he admits that the beneficial effects of charcoal as a fertilizer, depend upon the presence of other substances besides carbon. He says that plants thrive in pow-dered charcoal and may be made to blossom and bear fruit, if exposed to the influence of rain and the atnosphere. Rain water must there. fore contain one of the essentials of vegetable life, and this is ammonia. An instance of the quick vegeta-tion of seeds produced by the use of powdered charcoal is related by Mr. Raynbird in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of Eng. land, Vol. 7, page 541. He says during a very dry summer of 1844, two purposes-the seed was deposited with great regularity in the drills, and the carrots made their appearance above ground in a faw days notwithstanding the dryness of the wealther, and grew rapidly. The crop was a good one for the

In 1845, forty bushels powdered chorcoal per acre, were drilled in with green topped Aberdeen turnips in a light sandy loam, the previous for soiling. The young plants ap-peared above ground in a short space of time, and were ringled out in a week, as soon as turnips of a quicker growing kind that had been drilled twelve days earlier with one and one half cwt. of guano, mixed with beat ashes per acre. The good effects of charcoal as a fertili-zer last for hundreds of years.— This has been proved at Thurstable Hundred in Essex, England, where there is a large mound that accumulated around Roman pottery. The earth of the mound contains a large amount of charcoal, and preduces remarkable effects when ap-

What the Ohio Girls Can Do.

An Ohio girl, who had read something in a Cincinnati paper about the physicial degeneracy of American women, comes valiantly to their defense, at least so far as the girls of her acquamtance are concerned.
